

SCOTT BLOOM

Scott is a veteran comedian and television personality who has built a reputation as the "go-to" choice for business humor, having hosted hundreds of events for companies such as FedEx, Ford, IBM, MetLife, PepsiCo, Pfizer, and Verizon. In addition to his work as a highly respected emcee and comedic keynote speaker, he has had a successful career in television. Scott has been featured on Comedy Central numerous times, and was the host of his own weekly VH1 series. Scott recently co-hosted a national simulcast of the Grammy Awards from the Palace Theater. He currently lives in Los Angeles.

Your Business, Your Audience

Scott makes it his business to immerse himself in the specifics of your business and your event. That's how he's able to talk like an insider about your organization's products and people, buzzwords and acronyms. With Scott, you get more than great comedy; you get customized content that is for and about your audience. The result is more than just laughter; it's an uplifting, shared experience that celebrates who they are and what they do.

Scott can be trusted in front of any audience. He's smart, funny, clean and always engaging, never missing a beat. He's authentic and relatable, and he's a quick study. In a heartbeat, Scott walks and talks the corporate brand and business. In fact, most of his comedic routines are built around the company and corporate culture. His clients love that.

He's also quick on his feet, turning any unexpected moment on stage into corporate gold. Clients love that too. More than that, he's a people person. Audiences instantly connect, and the message is always heard and embraced.

On stage, executives connect just as well. He has a way of inspiring confidence that the transitions and their introductions will be flawless - and that always leads to better speaker presentations. He seamlessly and masterfully manages shows to successful outcomes at every level. That's why many of Scott's clients continue to bring him back year after year.
